OLD GLORY WRESTLED WITH NEPTUNE

PARTS OF AIRPLANE FOUND NEAR ATLANTIC GRAVEYARD

At Sable Island Near New Foundland's Bleak and Stormy Shores—The American Flag Painted on the Right Wing of the Plane Identified the Illfated Monoplane—The Three Brave Occupants Evidently Were Lost.

Somewhere in the wind-whipped North Atlantic Tuesday the Canadian steamship Kyle fought her way thru heavy seas keeping sharp lookout for a speck that might prove to be the rubber raft launched by Lloyd Bertaud, J. D. Hill and Philip A. Payne a week ago.

And lashed to her deck and washed by the white crested green waves that broke over her was the water-logged, tangled wreckage of Old Glory—a piece of the wing and three gasoline tanks, which the Kyle snatched from the Atlantic Monday afternoon.

This mute evidence of disaster, the wave-battered wing that still shows traces of the waving red, white and blue replica of the Stars and Stripes it carried, gave impetus to the "needle-in-a-haystack" search.

The slim thread of hope that Bertaud, Hill and Payne are afloat in their rubber life raft has been strengthened rather than severed.

Details of the wreckage which the sea gave up came by radio from Captain Tavenor, of the steamship Kyle, late Tuesday.

Captain Tavenor's message read: "We have on board 34 feet of Old Glory's wing. The tips of the right half are broken off and the plywood covering is partly gone, but the stars and stripes painted underneath, show plainly. The covering of the left portion of the wing salvaged is gone but pieces show bits of painting, presumably off the flag underneath the left half.

"We also have the left wheel connected to the frame and part of the right steering wheel connections; three of the gasoline tanks enclosed in the wing; four glass tubes and communications attached; the speaking tube and a lot of small wire tangled together.

"Our presumption is that body of plane twisted from wing and sank, as the wing shows evidence of buffeting by the heavy seas.

"We are still searching for the boat."

The delay in transmission of details of the finding of the wreckage was due to the short range of the Kyle's wireless and to a heavy storm.

The reports from the steamer Tuesday brought expressions of hopefulness from friends and relatives of the fliers.

"I am more hopeful than ever," Mrs. Bertaud declared. "From this message it appears the greater part of the plane has been found, with the exception of the engine. I am sure that when they came down in the water the pilots would have cut out of the engine from the plane to get rid of that weight, if it were at all possible.

"Mrs. Payne, Mr. Bertaud's mother and myself have taken new confidence that Payne, Bertaud and Hill will be found alive."

Hope also was expressed again that the fliers had been picked up by a fishing schooner and are safe in northern waters.

Finding airplane wreckage in widely separated parts of the Atlantic ocean may mean that the sea which has guarded the secret of the loss of the four transatlantic airplanes yet will relent to explain in part the disappearance of nine men and one woman.

The parts of the planes buoyant enough to survive as floating wreckage are marked sufficiently for identification by which aviation experts might reconstruct missing details of the catastrophes.

French fishermen have reported finding three weeks ago wreckage of a "yellowish color with black lettering," 250 miles off Sable Island, a treacherous strip of Nova Scotian land, long known as a "graveyard for ships."

Other wreckage has been found at Newquay, Cornwall, England. The Cornwall reports do not include identification marks. Three of the missing planes had wings each of a different shade of yellow, but none of these three had hopped off on its challenge to the Atlantic three weeks ago.

BANK MERGER.

The Midland National, Commercial and the Fayette County banks of Washington C. H., with estimated resources in excess of three million dollars will consolidate December 31. Negotiations have been under way for several months.

"The change is expected to promote efficiency and economy, and will have beneficial effect on all concerned," says the Washington C. H. Record Republican.

Anthropologists Study Life of the Eskimo

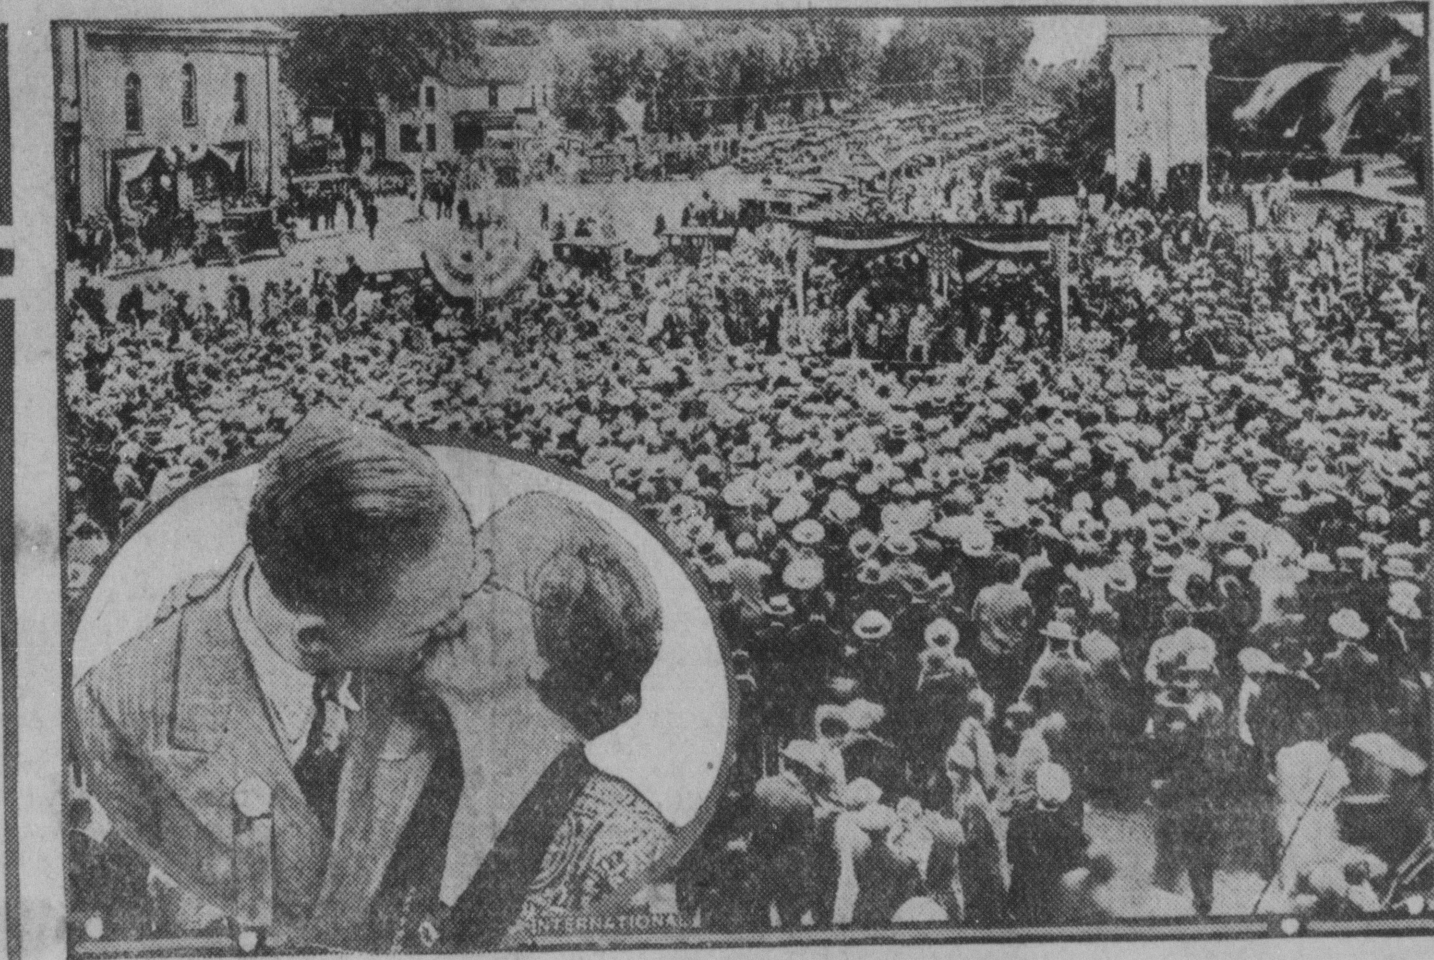

Seattle, Wash.—Traditions, language and manner of life of the more primitive Eskimos of Alaska are being studied by two anthropologists.

Nunivak island, midway between the Aleutians and Nome, is the field which Henry B. Collins, Jr., and T. Dale Stewart of the Smithsonian institution will explore to record the characteristics of a people who until four years ago had never seen a white man except for an occasional trader. To these people the most simple articles of modern civilization still are virtually unknown.

The two scientists will dig into deserted settlements for pottery, skulls, stone implements and other records of the past. They will work under the auspices of the American Association for Advancement of Science, American Council of Learned Societies and Smithsonian institution.

On Nunivak, the natives live in single-room dugouts, burn oil-soaked moss for heat and light and eat fish, frozen or dried with seal oil and an occasional walrus or whale for variety.

Chamberlin Warmly Welcomed by His Home Town

Has Had Much Experience
in Work of a Similar
Character in Illinois.

Active legislative duties of the Anti-Saloon League in Washington will be assumed by Dr. Francis Scott McBride, general superintendent, succeeding the late Wayne B. Wheeler, according to announcement from league headquarters Tuesday. Even after Mr. Wheeler's successor is appointed Dr. McBride will continue to have general direction of such activities.

Dr. McBride virtually will assume all roles of Mr. Wheeler in obtaining enactment of favorable dry legislation and opposing measures considered detrimental to federal prohibition. Mr. Wheeler's successor is expected to confine his duties chiefly to legal matters, but at the same time possessing sufficient legislative experience to be of material aid to Dr. McBride.

Dr. McBride's success as a legislative leader in Illinois, from which state he came as state superintendent to become general superintendent, was highly praised and many of his successes their recounted in detail.

"Father of Wireless"

Paid Only $75 a Month

Paris.—Edouard Branly is cited by newspapers as typifying the struggle of French scientists to work under miserable conditions. Branly is inventor of the condenser. France calls him the "father of the wireless."

Branly had as his only assistant in a ramshackle "laboratory" an aged woman who eked out a living by doing extra hours of housework in other homes. This maid of all work is now the scientist's "laboratory chief." She was intelligent and the professor trained her in his work.

For 50 years Branly worked under these conditions, drawing a salary of $75 a month as professor and supporting his family by occasional practice as a physician. These facts are told by French papers as illustrating the need to pay well men who give their lives to science.

Sizes of Planets

The naval observatory says that the smallest of the major planets is Mercury; diameter about 3,000 miles. Of the minor planets or asteroids, some are so small that it is impossible to measure their diameters. It is estimated that the smallest are less than 10 miles in diameter.

Coming Out of a Fog
By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD
(Copyright.)

BLUE sky, blue seas, blue eyes looking into his!

"I wouldn't call the king my cousin!" cried Forrester Knowlton, as he helped Peggy Sanford into his shining mahogany speed boat. "Where shall we go—North pole, South pole, or merely the blue Canary Isles?"

Pretty Peggy laughed. "Personally, I'd choose the blue Canary Isles, if it weren't for worrying Aunt Georgiana. As it is, how about Tamarack Cove?"

"You're captain!" said Forrester, and the next moment they were off.

The two of them were members of a Murray Bay house party and had been irresistibly drawn to one another from the very start, as if Aunt Georgiana were contriving to keep them apart.

But now he had her to himself for a whole afternoon with the blue summer skies over them and the blue St. Lawrence stretching ahead.

Little was said until, suddenly and quite on the impulse of the moment, Forrester reached across to where Peggy sat in a cretonned wicker chair and possessed himself of her hand.

Slowly she withdrew it, a troubled look in her eyes. "Please!"

Forrester's heart sank. "I—I wasn't just playing, Peggy," he said hoarsely. "I—I am quite crazy about you. I want you for my wife."

Peggy lifted a pair of miserable eyes to his. "It's impossible!" she said.

"Impossible? Then you must care for some one else?"

"Oh, no!" cried Peggy quickly. "That is—I mean—well, I'm engaged to Lester."

Forrester stared, unable to believe what he had heard. True, he wasn't her own cousin and yet—why, everyone, including his own family, knew what sort of a boy Lester was. Weak, unable to resist temptation of any sort.

"Peggy—" he began desperately.

But Peggy interrupted him. "Look, Forrester, is that smoke?"

Forrester looked ahead where a formless gray cloud was blotting out their view.

"Fog," he said briefly, "rolling in from the ocean." With a turn of the wheel, he swung the Starling about so sharply she showed her blades above water. "We'll have to race it home," he said.

At that instant, the engine sputtered, caught, and died. With an exclamation, Forrester sprang to the tank. Then he groaned. "Hang Lester! I let him have the boat all day yesterday. I told him to be sure and fill up at the Landing. Instead, he turned in the reserve and we've been running on that."

He was too concerned over his discovery to notice that Peggy's eyes had widened suddenly at the mention of Lester's name. It was important that they get themselves out of the ticklish situation they were in. Already, cool wisps of the incoming fog were brushing their faces.

"Take the wheel and keep her headed toward that point," he directed his companion.

Reaching under the long cushioned seat, he extracted a half-length of oar, used in fending when the usual bumpers proved inadequate.

"We'll just about make it," he said quietly, and set to work.

There were moments when advance cohorts of the fog came between them and the shore. Then for a space there would be sunlight again and Peggy would see that the trees running down to the water's edge were separating into individuals rather than appearing as a clustered dark green mass.

After what seemed an interminable length of time but was in reality little more than a couple of hours, the bow of the Starling nosed the sandy beach that stretched at the foot of a low bluff.

"We'll find the main road not far from the river," said Forrester confidently, "and follow it to the town."

He turned to lend the girl a helping hand up the bank, and, to his intense surprise, found it pressed between both of his.

"Wait, Forrester," she said shyly. "I—I think I am no longer engaged to Lester. I did it in the beginning to please Aunt Georgiana, who, for all she is only a sort of step-aunt, has been so wonderfully good to me. He told me yesterday he had to go to Three Rivers in the runabout—that there wouldn't be room for me. Instead—well, he took Genevieve Roberts out in your boat."

"I know I am right, for I saw Genevieve on the dock very early in the morning, and last night I overheard her tell Aunt Georgiana she had been steering the Starling all day. I thought she had been with you."

The man nodded gravely. "A lot is clear to me now," he said. "Lester asked me not to mention his change of plan to his mother, nor the fact that I did her errands in Three Rivers. Yes, I feel as if I were coming out of a fog. But Peggy, this means—"

One look into the lovely blue eyes uplifted to his and he knew what it meant.

OHIO STORIES

By J. H. GALBRAITH

Election Day and All-Saints Day
Our regular elections are held by law on the "first Tuesday after the first Monday in November" and the question why this insurance against the election day falling on the first day of that month must occur to anyone at all thoughtless.

It is an instance in which law takes cognizance of religious practices, though not the only one. The regulation dates back to an act of January 23, 1845. Without it election day would sometimes fall upon the first day of November, a contingency sought to be avoided, because in some churches—chiefly the Roman Catholic and Anglican—the first day of November is an important day in the calendar.

It is known as "All Saints Day" and is observed with proper religious exercises. It was established by Pope Gregory IV in 835 A. D. The list of saints of the church had grown until it was no longer possible to set aside a day exclusively to each. There were not enough days in the calendar. This day was set apart as one on which the memory of all the others should be honored.

"Church history states that the choice of this day was probably determined by the fact that Pope Gregory III had, in 731, consecrated a chapel in St. Peter's church in honor of all the saints and November 1 was the date of its consecration. Through the thousand intervening years and more, this act shows its influence on our election laws.

Tuesday has also been found a convenient day for election purposes. Monday, coming immediately after the general day of rest and worship, would obviously not be a wise choice. That day is used in making whatever final preparations for the voting may be necessary. When the dates for our primary elections were fixed, after the constitutional convention of 1912, it was prescribed that they should all be held on Tuesdays—the ordinary primaries on the second Tuesdays of August and those of the presidential elections on the last Tuesday of April.—Columbus Dispatch.

REGIONS OF ICE AGAIN ARE CALLING TO CHINOOK

Eleven-Year-Old Husky Will Be Used as Lead Dog in Byrd's Expedition.

Wonalancet, N. H.—Regions where adventure lurks amid snow and ice and biting winds are beckoning once more to Arthur T. Walden and his dog, Chinook.

Walden, veteran dog-team driver, with experience in Alaska and other parts of the Far North, will accompany Commander Richard E. Byrd's expedition to the Antarctic. He will be in charge of the sledge dogs to be used in establishing bases for the commander's polar flights.

Chinook, eleven-year-old half-breed husky, and Walden, have been companions on many previous adventures and together have won honors in sled-dog races in Canada and the United States. Walden raised the dog from puppyhood and a strong attachment exists between them.

Chinook is still exceptionally powerful, although too old for racing and his training makes him one of the most valuable of lead dogs. Last March, in the face of freezing temperature and terrific winds, he led a team of six dogs over the icy slopes of Mount Washington, highest peak in the White mountains, to the summit.

It was the only time the mountain has ever been scaled by dog team, and the feat was achieved largely through Chinook's strength, courage and intelligence. He averted disaster repeatedly when wind threatened to sweep the team from the mountain-side into the yawning ravines below.

Walden, who is fifty-six years old, mushed behind dog teams before and during the days of the Alaskan gold rush. He is a close friend of Leonard Seppala, Alaskan musher famed for his dash to Nome with antitoxin during the diphtheria epidemic three years ago. He thinks Seppala the greatest dog driver in the world and Seppala may be one of four or five other drivers picked to assist Walden.

Rabbit Snares of the Cliff Dwellers Found

Denver, Colo.—The first rabbit snares ever found in Colorado or any western state where the cliff dwellers once lived, were recently found by a party of explorers in a prehistoric Indian cliff dwelling, near Grand Junction, Colo. One of the remarkable things is the splendid state of preservation of the snares. They and the arrows were buried under rock and dust nearly three feet deep which had fallen down during the ages since the cliff dwellers had left them in the large cavern.

They had never been moistened and the strings of the snares which were hand twisted soap weed cord, are so strong that even today they cannot be broken with the hands.

One end of the cord is tied to a short piece of wood, through which a hole has been made. The free end is then pulled through the hole, leaving a loop in which the Indian caught his rabbits. Twelve snares and twenty arrows were found.

Scientists are unable to figure out what the arrows were used for as they are in no way like the ordinary arrows, shot from a bow. They have no arrowhead of flint and no notch at the other end.

Mental Diseases in Young People Increase

New York.—An appreciable increase in the number of young people who fall prey to mental diseases is found by Dr. Means S. Gregory, head of the psychiatric department of Bellevue hospital.

People are more enlightened about the danger of letting mental and nervous ills gain headway, and as a result more youthful cases reach the hospital, he says, but this does not fully explain the increase.

"The higher standards of the present day are largely responsible," he states. "The demand for material luxuries is greater today than it has ever been. The longings of youth are more intricate, more difficult to attain. They are more likely to be thwarted. And an increase in thwarted longings and ambitions makes for an increase in abnormal mental and nervous states."

"Huskies" Become Pests With Advent of Planes

Juneau.—With the rapid development of airplane service to and from Alaskan points, the problem arises concerning the future of the dogs which have been bred here for years as burden-bearers during the winter months.

Already, complaints are on file here, from numerous places, that dogs, loosed from their leashes, are reverting to the wild state and killing deer and moose. Many of these reports are from coast towns, where Indian owners of dogs have gone fishing for salmon and have left the dog families behind, generally without provision and shelter. Consequently, dogs, formerly very valuable, have gradually become the worst kind of pests.

Under a law here, it is forbidden to injure or kill prowling dogs—the statute having been formed when the canines were the prospector's and the trapper's best friends.

Portland, Ore.—While medical authorities maintain that one should bathe to be healthy, a different school of thought prevails in the ranks of "blanket stiffs."

Bathing sometimes is a foolish and dangerous pastime, according to these gentlemen, and that opinion, strange as it may seem, is backed by well considered facts.

"Little Curly" Davis, a tight-line skinner of construction camps, known throughout many western states as a teamster who never yet has disgraced himself by feeding, watering or currying a horse, was the leader in a recent discussion in refuting the alleged bunk that warm baths are beneficial to the physical man.

Calls Reasons Sound.

The supposition of hoboos preferring dirt gained new circulation recently with the publication of a story from London, pointing out that British tramps are shunning workhouses since the establishment of a rule compelling them to take warm baths.

"Those English tramps are right," said Curly, who, strangely enough, uses good English. "The objection is based on sound, scientific purposes."

"That's so," agreed a soft-voiced "wobbly," who had just complained about the toughness of cops in the region "around the horn" in southwest Iowa. And the hard-faced student of Huxley merely nodded his head in agreement. So did an Irishman who had been objecting to the use of copper wire because ore at the Anaconda mine in Butte is so heavy. Aluminum wire, such as is generally used in Canada, should transmit all juice, was his idea.

But why the shunning of warm baths if hoboos prefer being clean?

Companions Agree.

"Little Curly's" explanation is that in the winter time a man's body adjusts itself to the cold and protection is furnished by an indefinite sort of gloss, which hardens the outer skin. This gives the man who is subject to extreme exposure unusual cold-resisting possibilities.

If the film is broken by warm water after one has become accustomed to its protection exposure is likely to result in pneumonia, and sometimes death, the little tramp maintains, and his companions said this was so.

"That is the reason," continued Curly, "that so few of the road boys in hard circumstances freeze to death. We stand weather that would kill the average man; so does any teamster, floater, miner, or northern lumberjack."

"It also is the reason the English 'boes are shunning the workhouses under the new order."

Tokyo Epicures FindKick in Bear's Feet

Tokyo.—It's not pickled pig's feet that tickle the appetite of rich Japanese epicures, but boiled bear's feet.

It requires about a week to cook properly the nether extremities of a bear, and the cost of a dinner of this kind ranges from 200 to 500 yen, according to the fixings and liquid details.

The latest dinner of boiled bear's feet given in Japan was described by the vernacular press as a real epicurean event. The host was Yoichi Sawamoto, one of the wealthy citizens of the capital. He gives a bear's feet dinner once a year.

The origin of bear's feet as food is traced back to China several hundred or more years ago. A war lord captured an enemy general and was about to cut off his head. But, just before the sword was to fall, the war lord had a generous idea and informed the prisoner he would grant his last desire before the decapitation.

"Well, I would like a dinner of bear's feet before I die," replied the thoughtful victim.

The hunt for a bear took about two weeks, but in the meantime the defeated general's reinforcements arrived, conquered and captured the war lord and released the general.

Whereupon the head-cutting business was reversed. But, it is related, the general actually ate the bear's feet and found them so much to his liking that he became a bear-foot addict.

Bobbed Hair Is Tabooedby Women of Holstein

Berlin.—The north German state of Holstein holds a unique record in that there is not a bobbed head to be found among its native women.

If the traveler succeeds in discerning a short-haired representative of the gentler sex, he will find that she hails from elsewhere than this former grand duchy.

The Holstein women, who are famed for their beauty, pride themselves on their thick blond or brown tresses. Even the girls of school age wear long braids and object to cutting off what they are taught is womanhood's crowning glory.

Far from advertising their ability to clip women's hair, the barbers in towns like Kiel or Ploen display beautiful braids and curls in their show windows as an inducement to women whose hair is scant to pad their natural crop.

The women are up to the minute in other fashions, such as short skirts and silk stockings, and they subscribe to fashion journals as avidly as do their sisters in the rest of Germany.

Poultry Victims of Floods

Human beings, generally, are the chief recipients of aid from the Red Cross in times of disaster, but in the recent floods on the Mississippi, animals were rescued and cared for in great numbers, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. At Opelousas, St. Landry parish, La., the largest temporary hen yard in the United States was constructed to feed 100,000 chickens driven from their roosts by the flood waters. The feathered refugees were fed by the Red Cross, as were 30,000 hogs, 10,000 mules and some 30,000 head of cattle. One of the problems arising from the work was to find the owners.

Before he became famous as the constructor of serials, William Lord Wright was a newspaper man and at one time edited a country paper where the rival editor was most annoying. This man had the habit of stopping his press to insert some bit of last minute news. Hardly a day went by that didn't show on the front page an article starting: "We stop the press to announce."

Finally it got on Bill's nerves, and one day his own front page bore the hated legend: "We stop the press to announce that there is nothing of sufficient importance to justify the stopping of the press. Giddap!"—Los Angeles Times.

Stowaways Guard Monkey

Two young stowaways on the steamer The Lambs, in the port of Baltimore from Manila, with a cargo of sugar, made themselves so useful as caretakers of four monkeys that the captain had aboard that they've been signed on for a Far East trip and have decided to follow the sea. The boys boarded the ship at the Canal Zone. They are Claude and John W. Dawson, both of St. Louis. Only once on the voyage did their charges get away and then one of them entered an officer's cabin and devoured two cakes of soap.

"Best For The Least"

HERE COMES THE CORN.
 "Ninety in the shade, and no shade" inclines a man to grumble a little at the fervor of the climate. But, wiping the sweat from his brow, he scans the horizon and what does he see?

Two hundred million bushels of corn hurrying along the way to the crib. It may be 211,000,000 bushels, or a little more or less, but who cares for a few bushels of corn just at this time? All eyes are on Nebraska just now. Just because the state promises to turn in the only real corn crop in existence. Kansas, not a corn state in the real sense of the term, is booming along with a little old 150,000,000 bushel crop, which makes those jayhawkers feel mighty proud. But it is in the Nebraska crop that is getting the attention.

Crape hangers are singing the blues, telling a skeptical world that the old king is likely to be caught by relentless enemy, Jack Frost. Of course, if frost comes before the crop is ripe it's all off. But every one of these 90 degree days and 75 degree nights is doing double duty. Corn is maturing at a rate that is not to be underestimated. Every hour of hot sunshine is turning into gold the grains that were soft and white and tender two weeks ago. Doing the work speedily, but effectively.

We have no real reason to expect a killing frost in Nebraska until about the middle of October. A little nip, perhaps, but not the real blighting sort. September has seen frosts but very seldom to the extent of killing the corn crop. Rains have put the soil into splendid condition for fall planting and the farmers are making the most of the opportunity. And as each day dawns bright and clear and each night comes down hot and humid, the cry goes up all over the state:

"Here comes the corn." — Omaha Bee.

Largest Searchlight

What is declared to be the world's largest searchlight is being erected at the top of Mount Valerien, near Paris, to guide aviators. A single beam will direct night air travelers from the coast of France to the point where they arrive from England, until the aerial lighthouse at Dijon guides them on to Marseilles. The light is powerful enough to penetrate heavy curtains.

SOCIAL CALENDAR

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Thomas of Pomeroy announce the marriage of their daughter, Ethel A. Thomas, to Mr. Albert M. Voll, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Voll, of Circleville. The marriage took place Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Sacred Heart parsonage by Rev. Father Dumm. For the past nine years Mr. Voll has held a position as agent of American Railway Express company. Mr. Voll and bride are the guests of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Voll. They will be at home to their friends at 145½ Main street, Pomeroy, after September 25.

Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Mowery and Mr. and Mrs. Carl C. Kreider entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Mowery at Tarlton Sunday, September 11, their brothers and sisters and families on both sides. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. George Myers, Mr. and Mrs. Otis Myers, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Mowery, Mr. and Mrs. Donald D. Mowery, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Kessler and daughter, Mary, and Mrs. Julia Hoy-sil, all of Columbus; Mr. John E. Myers, Mr. and Mrs. Foster Miller and daughters, Ruth, Frances and Helen, of Groveport; Mrs. E. S. Mowery and Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Mowery and son, Charles Jr., and daughter, Joanne, of Circleville; Mr. George E. Mowery and Mr. Glenn Stermen, of Pickerington; Mr. and Mrs. Willis F. Mowery, Mr. and Mrs. Carl C. Kreider and sons, Kenneth and Claude and daughter, Lucia, of Tarlton; Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Thomas and daughters, Ella Marie, and Flora Bell, and son, Junior, of Oak-land. At the noon hour a most delicious dinner was served and all seemed to enjoy themselves and ate to their hearts' content. The afternoon was spent in a good social time and several games of horseshoes were played and toward evening all departed to their homes seeming to have enjoyed themselves and thanking the hostess for their big dinner.

Miss Mildred Lois Stoer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Stoer, of Williamsport, and Mr. Leland Miesse Frederick, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Byron Frederick, Circleville, were married according to the rites of the Methodist church by Rev. Isaac E. Miller of the King avenue M. E. church, Columbus, Ohio, at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon, September 10, 1927. The double ring ceremony was performed in the presence of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Frederick, brother and sister-in-law of the groom. The bride wore an all white' canton and georgette crepe dress, trimmed in white ribbon. She wore white kid footwear and a white canton crepe picture hat. After the ceremony the bridal couple were entertained to dinner at the Neil house by Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Frederick. The couple left afterwards for a week's honeymoon trip calling on friends and relatives in Springfield, Cincinnati, Circleville, Williamsport and Toledo. The bride traveled in a navy blue suit, hat to match. Mrs. Frederick graduated from Monroe high school with the class of 1926. She is now attending Ohio State university taking a home economics course. Mr. Frederick is a graduate of Ohio State university receiving the bachelor of electrical engineering degree. He is employed in the line construction department of the Ohio Bell Telephone company, Columbus. He is a member of Delta Tau Delta fraternity and the Signal corps honorary fraternity, Pi Tau Pi Sigma. He is also a member of the Order of the Masonic lodge and a lieutenant of the United States Reserve Officers corps. The marriage was quite cleverly planned and carried out, coming as a pleasant surprise to the immediate families and friends. After September 18, they will be at home at 98 East Eleventh avenue, Columbus.

Johnny, a Cat, and Cupid

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

JOHN RAYMOND listened to the most blood-curdling sharpening of a knife that he had ever heard. Was there to be a tremendous slaughtering in the flat next door or was it merely that some one was about to carve something?

Certainly whoever was sharpening that knife intended to get a keen edge on it and no mistake.

No wonder the gorgeous blue Persian cat, who occupied a sunny portion of the fence dividing the gardens one flight below, bounded frantically up the fire escape to see what it was all about.

John Raymond would like to have known, too, as his curiosity was aroused. Every morning, since the windows had been opened to welcome the new spring, he had listened to that knife-sharpening process and tried to picture what breakfast dainty could possibly necessitate so keen a knife.

And each morning as the lovely cat heard it, he dashed like a streak of silver lightning into the open window.

Raymond had used every cat call in his vocabulary to lure the handsome pet into his own flat, but Johnny, as he had heard the cat called, simply stared at him with those wonderful topaz eyes and kept his distance.

And the more aloof Johnny kept himself, the more eager was Raymond to induce him inside. Raymond was not only a cat lover but he painted animals in so successful a manner as to have a considerable fame to his credit as an artist.

Then, like a flash the truth dawned on Raymond.

The sharpening of the knife was some secret code between cat and master or mistress, whichever the case might be. No doubt Johnny knew that a bit of meat was to be cut for him when that sound reached his ears, and he lost no time in demanding it.

Consequently, next day, when Raymond felt that the flat next door was empty of its human inhabitants, he got out his own carving knife and a tempting bit of fresh liver and sharpened away with all his might.

A flash, and Johnny had whirled himself into Raymond's open window. There was no more aloofness. Johnny was purring and rubbing most affectionately against Raymond's legs and gazing up with his great topaz eyes. In fact, Johnny put his two silky paws on the edge of Raymond's breakfast table and left two smutty paw marks thereon.

That was the beginning of a new friendship. Johnny, being left for several hours a day all by himself, he made himself comfortable in Raymond's sunny flat.

And Raymond set to work on a painting that was later to dazzle the eyes of the animal lover's world. Raymond had wisely left a bit of Chinese blue velvet carelessly on the sunny window ledge, knowing full well that Johnny would easily ensconce himself thereon.

And the painting progressed wonderfully until one evening toward sunset when Raymond had closed the window with Johnny on the inside.

Suddenly into his artist's dream burst the sound of a frantic feminine voice.

"Kitty, kitty, KITTY! Come Johnny—COME JOHNNY!" and later the loud sharpening of a knife.

Raymond jumped to his feet and opened the window, but as a matter of fact Johnny never moved—he was well fed and most cozy on his Chinese blue velvet cushion.

"Are you calling a blue Persian cat?" asked Raymond with a guilty look on his face, "because if you are he's in here with me."

"Well, I like that! Enticing my beautiful cat into your flat and locking him in. I think I will report you to—"

"My dear young lady," expostulated Raymond while he definitely admired the speaker—or at least the little glimpse he had of her, "I merely wanted to make a portrait of your cat—he's the most beautiful animal I've ever seen."

"Oh!" exclaimed Miss Jarvis, hanging so far out of the window now that Raymond was fearful of her toppling out, "could I just have a peep at it?"

Raymond beamed and Miss Jarvis discovered what she had felt for a long time, unbeknown to Raymond, that she should like her masculine neighbor—she had often watched him going in and out of the flat but he seemed always so preoccupied that she had despaired of ever knowing him.

"Only upon the condition that you refrain from reporting me to the police as a cat thief—I haven't any desire to figure in the papers."

Johnny in the meantime had arisen from his velvet cushion, stretched himself and yawned comfortably. His sitting for the day seemed to be over and he approached Miss Jarvis.

She took him fondly in her arms and he rubbed his soft head against her hands in perfectly happy cat love. He purred and was perhaps telling her all about the portrait.

"And when am I to see Johnny's picture?" asked Miss Jarvis.

"I'll bring it round to your flat door—if I may—right away, if you'll let me," said Raymond, and while the silvery Johnny and his golden mistress disappeared from the window, Cupid got out his bow and arrow.

AMUSEMENTS

One way to discover whether or not you have screen ability is to test yourself before the mirror.

According to Joan Crawford, whose rise to success has been one of the most phenomenal of the year, every feature of the face must express emotion. The stage star can use his voice to good effect. The screen actor has only expression.

Miss Crawford, who is now playing the leading feminine role in "The Taxi Dancer," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at the Met theater Wednesday declares that in order to test your ability you should stand in front of a mirror, cover all the face but the eyes and express a given emotion with them alone. Then cover everything but the mouth, leaving the fingers apart to be able to see and try to get over the thought with this feature.

Try the same experiment with the eyebrows and then with the entire face. To make facial expression complete, each feature must work with the other for perfection. The legitimate actor can make skillful gestures which aid his performance, but in a large close-up the screen artist must say everything with his face.

"The Taxi Dancer," is one of the important pictures on M-G-M's 1927 releasing schedule and the cast includes Owen Moore, Marc MacDermott, Claire MacDowell, Douglas Gilmore, William Orlanmond, Rockliffe Fellowes, Gertrude Astor and others. The screen play was written by A. P. Younger.

TERRY, KING OF ALL UNCLE TOM PRODUCERS.

Uncle Tom shows may come and Uncle Tom shows may go, but—Terry's big company goes on forever, and is looked upon as King and Monarch of them all with the slogan, "Forever, Foremost and Newest." Many have tried to imitate the successful Terry for years, springing up like Jonah's gourd, but they have withered in the night like a school of minnows following in the wake of a whale, and it was thus that the lines were adopted, "After the Minnows Comes the Whale," and it has surely proved in its place when used. Terry has been a successful producer of Uncle Tom's Cabin for the past thirty-three years and this season is no exception to the rule. His production this season is more than living up to the past reputation of former years, the large company composed of some fifty people, both white and colored, travel in their own especially constructed cars, and give the performance under a monster waterproof tent, and when the show comes this year, it will be found to be greatly enlarged.

Terry's big production of Harriet Ward Beecher Stowe's famous slave play will appear for one night performance only at Circleville, Thursday, September 15.

Terry's Challenge concert bands will give free concerts upon the principal streets. Doors open at 7:30 p. m. Performance at 8 p. m. 13sept d3.

Deceptive Moon

The moon's halo is deceptive, and no wise man judges tomorrow's weather by it. Although the halo often appears before a storm, the storm does not wait for the halo and frequently comes unannounced. There are such things as "clearing" halos, when the halos precede good weather. As someone has observed, "You can only really know it's raining when it's wet."

Vice of Gambling

Be assured that, although men of eminent genius have been guilty of all other vices, none worthy of more than a secondary name has ever been a gambler. Either an excess of avarice or a deficiency of what in physics is called excitability, is the cause of it; neither of which can exist in the same bosom with genius, with patriotism, or with virtue.—Walter Savage Landor.

Seek Camphor Secret

Botanists are seeking to learn the secret of why one camphor tree will produce solid camphor, and another, although similar in appearance only, camphor oil, which is far less valuable. The Chinese have kept the secret for centuries, and the Japanese, who discovered it in 1895, are also closely guarding it, for to lose it would be to surrender Japan's camphor monopoly.

Queer Beliefs StillExisting in Norway

That superstition is still strong in some parts of Norway is plainly shown by a report from a governmental official who visited Lofoten in northern Norway. In a desolate place, where he took a rest, he found the body of a dog nailed to a birch tree and hanging with head downward. A closer investigation of this uncanny find revealed a piece of wood nailed to the tree under the dog and bearing the inscription: "I give you, oh my faithful dog, to death. Kneeling and in sorrow, I kill you and nail you to this tree with incantation that all wild beasts shall lose their teeth and leave my cows and reindeers in peace."

In all probability, one of the Lapps has here besought the spirits and followed the tradition of thousands of years ago when favorite animals were sacrificed to gain the favor of the Great Spirits of Nature.

Elizabeth, N. J., Sept. 12.—(UP.)—A deputy sheriff served Mrs. Linde E. Bache, 34, with summons and complaint in divorce proceedings brought by her wealthy husband, after her elopement with a traffic policeman.

Service of the papers was the first intimation that Mrs. Bache, wife of John Bache, millionaire iron and steel man, of Plainfield, N. J., and New York, had returned from Columbus, Ohio. She was arrested in that city with Joseph Devore, the policeman, who is in custody, awaiting trial for desertion of his wife and baby.

SLEEPING SICKNESS MARKS ITS VICTIMS

More than 5,000 people have died from encephalitis lethargica, the so-called sleeping sickness, in England and Wales in the last five years, according to an announcement recently made by the minister of health. Health authorities in England are expressing alarm over the encephalitis situation even though the number of cases has been reduced from 5,000 in 1924 to 2,267 in 1926. It has been estimated that about 30 per cent of all cases die, and that 70 per cent of the recoveries show various disease manifestations ranging from mild conduct disorder to complete paralysis. The London county council has made efforts to provide for the treatment of partly recovered victims, but this meets the needs of only a comparatively small group. It has been pointed out to the home secretary that there is need of providing an institution where children can receive special treatment, for its after effects are recognized as a contributing cause of delinquency. Active need of scientific research to combat this scourge is urged.

BARON CHALLENGED BY PARIS JEWELER

Rothschild, However, Laughed at Idea of Duel.

Paris.—A high society drama which led to Louis Cartier, the Rue de la Paix jeweler, challenging Baron Maurice de Rothschild, a racing man and member of the chamber of deputies, to fight a duel with him has caused a tremendous sensation in Paris.

In making up a list of guests for a dance that he was giving in his magnificent home in the Rue Monceau recently, Baron Maurice, who is a great-great-grandson of the founder of the famous financial dynasty, wrote down the name of Mme. Louis Cartier, who is one of the great Parisian beauties, but intentionally left out that of her husband. His social secretary made an error and sent the invitation to "Monsieur and Madame Louis Cartier," who were ignorant of the baron's real wishes.

"What are you doing here?" Baron Maurice asked M. Cartier as soon as he saw him.

"I am here because you invited me," M. Cartier replied sharply.

"You are mistaken," the baron insisted, while a number of guests stood listening to this conversation in amazement.

"Our invitation was addressed to 'Monsieur and Madame Cartier,'" M. Cartier declared hotly.

"Anyway, I don't want you here," the baron remarked and walked away.

Flushed with anger, M. Cartier called his wife, who was dancing at the time, and they walked out of the house, which threw a certain chill over the party. The first thing next morning, M. Cartier sent the invitation marked "Monsieur and Madame" to Baron de Rothschild and at the same time he sent his card and two seconds, who explained that their friend wished to avenge his honor with swords, pistols or any other weapon the baron preferred, and asked him to name his seconds.

Baron de Rothschild laughed at the idea of a duel and the affair still hangs in suspense with all the upper crust of Parisian society anxiously waiting to see what will happen. He has just left Paris to take a month's cure at Marienbad, however, and the jeweler can do nothing except gnash his teeth until his opponent returns.

"No Learn Step on Gas,"Say Old Indian Braves

Glacier Park, Mont.—The automobile will not entirely replace ponies among the Indians until the present older generation of braves has entirely passed away, according to the observation of Chief Two Guns White Calf of the Glacier National park reservation. He says that while the younger Indians take readily to flippers, their seniors never could learn automatic use of toe pressure on the gas feed, brake and clutch, since they had been too long in the reverse habit of "digging" their heels into the cayuse's ribs.

Boston Housewife WalksAbout Eight Miles Daily

Boston.—The average housewife walks eight miles a day in doing her day's work, according to the survey made here by the National Foundation for Foot Health.

The foundation survey showed that the number of trips the woman housekeeper makes up and down stairs during a day would more than equal climbing to the top of the Boston custom-house tower—approximately thirty stories.

California Astronomer Measures the Universe

Berkeley, Calif.—The sidereal universe, that vast expanse beyond the earth which provides an ethereal setting for a billion stars, is estimated to have a diameter of 194 quadrillion miles by Allan Douglas Maxwell, a James M. Goewey fellow in astronomy.

This computation is the result of preliminary studies concluded at the University of California Lick observatory on Mount Hamilton.

Maxwell's conclusions were reached in a study of the destiny of stars toward the edge of the sidereal galaxy in which the solar system is found. His computation was offered as a working supposition, which may be altered by further observations.

Peering into the heavens, he made his observations by means of the spectroscopic in six areas in the Cygnus region of the milky way. The problem confronting Maxwell was to compute the distances of the fainter stars and to discover how far into space the cloudlike mass extended.

Maxwell is believed to have reached a greater distance from the earth than has previously been reached in the section of the sky he studied, with single stars as an objective. He successfully photographed the spectra of stars approximately 96,000,000,000,000 miles away. At that distance few stars were observable, and Maxwell believes the sidereal universe probably ends not far beyond.

Breaks Closed-Car 2,000-mile Record

Then during night skidded in rain storm, turned over several times, received body repairs only

Then Finishes 15,000-miles at 62.709 M.P.H.

For more than 30 hours, averaging better than 65 miles an hour, this strictly stock Auburn Sedan had been whirling around the Atlantic City Speedway day and night.

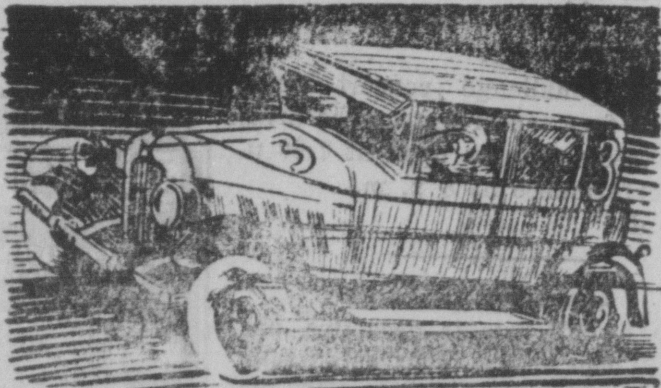

Then came a terrific rain storm. Wet track. At 70 miles per hour the driver dozed, the car crashed.

Radiator and body repairs were made. Seven hours had been lost. But the Sedan went back into the test with the same driver. It caught up with the other two Auburn stock cars and finished the unprecedented distance of 15,000 miles.

After the accident, the car was declared non-stock, as it was no longer complete—exactly as sold, but its time continued to be officially recorded by the A.A.A. The longest, hardest and fastest official test ever given a closed car.

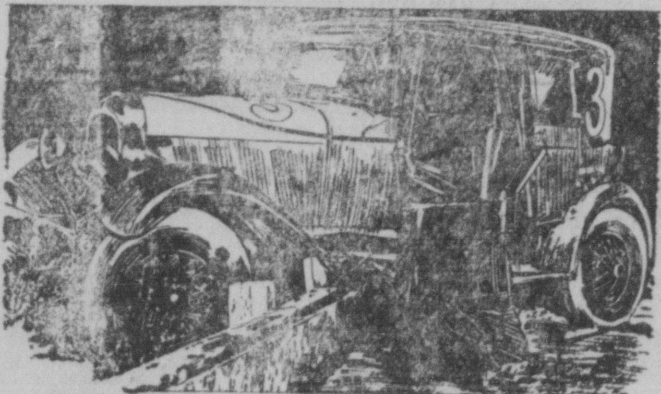

Unheard of as this performance is, it was only an incident in the 42,000 miles of official stock car test Auburn conducted, breaking all records for completely equipped stock cars from 5 to 5,000 miles, and establishing new stock car records from 5,000 to 15,000 miles.

The purpose of this extreme and hitherto unattempted stock car test, was to demonstrate by three times greater proof the supreme leadership of Auburn cars in speed, endurance, durability and efficiency. Your Auburn dealer has exact duplicates of the Auburn cars that made these phenomenal records.

Drawing made from actual photograph

The Auburn Straight Eight Sedan, one of the three fully equipped strictly stock cars in the Atlantic City Speedway endurance test. Here it is shown traveling better than 70 miles an hour after breaking closed-car 2,000 mile record at 65.583 miles per hour.

Drawing made from actual photograph

About the middle of the second night of this continuous run, when the track was wet as a result of a rain storm, the driver dozed. As a result, the car going at high speed skidded. It hit the guard rail and turned over. The sturdy construction of Auburn resisted this smash so well that only body damages resulted. The driver was unhurt.

Drawing made from actual photograph

Here is proof of stamina! After 7 hours for photographs and body repairs, this sedan went back into the endurance test, driven by the same driver, and finished the remainder of the 15,000 miles at an average speed of over 67 miles an hour for the net running time for the entire distance.

EPIDEMIC DYING

Last New Infantile Paralysis Case Here Aug. 30.

No new cases of infantile paralysis have been reported in Columbus since Aug. 30, City Health Commissioner Beer announced Monday. There are five cases here.

Indications are that the epidemic has virtually died out in Columbus.

Dr. Beer denied Monday that the death of Silvio Testaguzza, 5-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Augusto Testaguzza, 1165 Peters avenue, in University Isolation Hospital, Sunday, was due to the disease.

The child's death was caused from tetanus, Dr. Beer said. The illness had been diagnosed as infantile paralysis. Dr. Beer said. In addition to the parents, a brother, Vito, also survives. Funeral arrangements are being made by John Quint.—Columbus Citizen.

GRAVE SITES OF SOLDIERS WAR OF 1912

Complete Record is Sought
Which Will be a Part of the Archives of Ohio.

Citizens of all parts of the state have been asked by the adjutant general's department to assist in the preparation of a complete record of the burial places of soldiers of 1812, which, when complete, will become a part of the state archives.

The movement which was originally sponsored by the Daughters of 1812 is in charge of Mrs. John R. Tanner of London, chairman of the grave marking committee of the organization. The society has furnished the state department with the names of 137 soldiers of the war and their burial places and members of the society believe that there are scores of other burial places which have not been recorded.

Among the names furnished to the department is that of Captain Jonathan Alder, pioneer Ohioan for whom dedicatory exercises will be held September 17, by members of the Jonathan Elder chapter.

It is planned to hold the exercises at the pioneer's cabin which has been preserved and was recently moved to Alder and Foster Chapel, near West Jefferson.

Love on a Ladder

IN CASES of serious illness Doctor

Lanning did not attend members of his own family, but when Martha had hysterics that night in midsummer when Lanning accidentally encountered her in the act of eloping with Peter Letson, he did not consider her condition serious enough to require the services of an outside physician. Having hysterics, under the circumstances, was entirely normal. But even normal symptoms needed treatment, so after Peter had been dismissed with a curt good night from Doctor Lanning and a look of mute and tearful entreaty from Martha, Doctor Lanning escorted his sobbing daughter to her room, gave her a drink of cold water and told her to go to bed and to stay in her room for two or three days.

The interruption of Martha's elopement had been quite accidental as far as Doctor Lanning was concerned. He had been roused at midnight by the ringing of his bedside telephone. A country patient wanted him to come at once and rather drowsily, but with all speed, the doctor had put on his clothes and had gone downstairs and out to the garage to get his car when he heard whispers in the driveway ahead of him. Before he even realized that the young couple standing there were his daughter, Martha, and Peter Letson, he heard a shrill shriek of alarm. He knew the voice was Martha's, and Martha was standing there in hat and light coat with a little traveling bag.

The really surprising thing about it all, as Doctor Lanning thought after he got his daughter to promise that she would not make another attempt to elope during his absence, and had finally started off in his car, was that there was no sane reason why Martha and Peter should have planned an elopement.

Doctor Lanning didn't realize then that the elopement had come as the result of Martha's desire to have what she considered a romantic marriage. And now for the first time Doctor Lanning felt decided disapproval of Peter, and when the next morning Peter telephoned to ask permission to speak with him and Martha, the doctor curtly refused. He also warned the young man that any letters or messages he might send to his daughter would not be delivered. She was at present confined to her room in a state of nervous excitement.

From a distance Peter watched the Lanning house, and when he saw the doctor's car start out on his morning round of calls he cautiously drew near. Painters were at work on the house—looking at them Peter had a bright idea. And when Doctor Lanning returned an hour or so later he might have observed that whereas three men had been working on ladders and scaffolds when he left there were now four men in paint-spattered white overalls and regulation white canvas caps.

About ten o'clock the next morning Doctor Lanning backed his car out of the garage and down the driveway that ran close to the house and then to the road. Martha's room was on that side of the house just above the driveway—Doctor Lanning had gone to the garage from a back door of the house and had not noticed a painter's long ladder braced against the side of the house with base planted in the gravel driveway. Doctor Lanning reversed his car. He backed and then above the sound of his engine he heard a shout, a rattling of wood and a splash of something limp and liquid on the top of his car. This was the pall of paint that had been held by the painter on the ladder which the car hit as the doctor backed from the garage. The ladder lay flat on the ground—Doctor Lanning saw it as he quickly got out of his car to investigate.

He looked anxiously to see if he had distinguished some poor painter, when he knocked the ladder down. He looked up and there he saw a tall young man in white overalls clinging desperately to the window sill—and then he saw two fair arms stretch out the open window and, after a few seconds when it seemed as if the young man might lose his hold on the window sill entirely, his tall, lank figure was drawn into the house.

Doctor Lanning hurried upstairs and into his daughter's room. He opened the door and saw Martha standing there with the painter's arms about her—and the painter was Peter Letson.

Doctor Lanning began to laugh, so, too, did Peter, and finally Martha.

"I had to see Martha—to see what she wanted me to do about the elopement," stammered Peter, "and since you wouldn't let me even write, I got the painter to give me a job. I bribed him for the privilege of working on this side of the house. I have spent most of my time for two days painting the frames of Martha's windows. The paint is so thick there I dare say it will have to be scraped or chopped off—"

"And then I came along and knocked the ladder out from under you," laughed the doctor. "It was very inconsiderate of you to let the paint drop on the top of my car—that will have to be scraped off, too." He paused and looked whimsically at Martha and Peter. "You're not going to try another elopement, are you? No objections to a regular wedding—any time you and Martha want it."

Britons Try to Walk to Coney in N. Y. Subway

New York.—An English family, consisting of R. C. Walton, his wife and daughter, started to walk to Coney Island using a subway for a footpath until James O'Donald, subway motor-man, made an emergency stop to point out to them "the error of their way."

In England, the word "underground" or "tube" means what Americans know as a subway, and subway means a foot passage under a street or building, so, when the Waltons decided to walk to the beach resort and were told that the subway would be the shortest way there, they entered the Broadway subway of the Brooklyn-Manhattan line and started down the express tracks.

PARTS OF AIRPLANE FOUND NEAR ATLANTIC GRAVEYARD

At Sable Island Near New Foundland's Bleak and Stormy Shores—The American Flag Painted on the Right Wing of the Plane Identified the Ill-fated Monoplane—The Three Brave Occupants Evidently Were Lost.

Somewhere in the wind-whipped North Atlantic Tuesday the Canadian steamship Kyle fought her way thru heavy seas keeping sharp lookout for a speck that might prove to be the rubber raft launched by Lloyd Bertaud, J. D. Hill and Philip A. Payne a week ago.

And lashed to her deck and washed by the white crested green waves that broke over her was the water-logged, tangled wreckage of Old Glory—a piece of the wing and three gasoline tanks, which the Kyle snatched from the Atlantic Monday afternoon.

This mute evidence of disaster, the wave-battered wing that still shows traces of the waving red, white and blue replica of the Stars and Stripes it carried, gave impetus to the "needle-in-a-haystack" search.

The slim thread of hope that Bertaud, Hill and Payne are afloat in their rubber life raft has been strengthened rather than severed.

Details of the wreckage which the sea gave up came by radio from Captain Tavenor, of the steamship Kyle, late Tuesday.

Captain Tavenor's message read: "We have on board 34 feet of Old Glory's wing. The tips of the right half are broken off and the plywood covering is partly gone, but the stars and stripes painted underneath, show plainly. The covering of the left portion of the wing salvaged is gone but pieces show bits of painting, presumably off the flag underneath the left half.

"We also have the left wheel connected to the frame and part of the right steering wheel connections; three of the gasoline tanks enclosed in the wing; four glass tubes and communications attached; the speaking tube and a lot of small wire tangled together.

"Our presumption is that body of plane twisted from wing and sank, as the wing shows evidence of buffeting by the heavy seas.

"We are still searching for the boat."

The delay in transmission of details of the finding of the wreckage was due to the short range of the Kyle's wireless and to a heavy storm.

The reports from the steamer Tuesday brought expressions of hopefulness from friends and relatives of the fliers.

"I am more hopeful than ever," Mrs. Bertaud declared. "From this message it appears the greater part of the plane has been found, with the exception of the engine. I am sure that when they came down in the water the pilots would have cut out the engine from the plane to get rid of that weight, if it were at all possible.

"Mrs. Payne, Mr. Bertaud's mother and myself have taken new confidence that Payne, Bertaud and Hill will be found alive."

Hope also was expressed again that the fliers had been picked up by a fishing schooner and are safe in northern waters.

Finding airplane wreckage in widely separated parts of the Atlantic ocean may mean that the sea which has guarded the secret of the loss of the four transatlantic airplanes yet will relent to explain in part the disappearance of nine men and one woman.

The parts of the planes buoyant enough to survive as floating wreckage are marked sufficiently for identification by which aviation experts might reconstruct missing details of the catastrophes.

French fishermen have reported finding three weeks ago wreckage of a "yellowish color with black lettering," 250 miles off Sable Island, a treacherous strip of Nova Scotian land, long known as a "graveyard for ships."

Other wreckage has been found at Newquay, Cornwall, England. The Cornwall reports do not include identification marks. Three of the missing planes had wings each of a different shade of yellow, but none of these three had hopped off on its challenge to the Atlantic three weeks ago.

BANK MERGER.

The Midland National, Commercial and the Fayette County banks of Washington C. H., with estimated resources in excess of three million dollars will consolidate December 31. Negotiations have been under way for several months.

"The change is expected to promote efficiency and economy, and will have beneficial effect on all concerned," says the Washington C. H. Record Republican.

Anthropologists Study Life of the Eskimo

Seattle, Wash.—Traditions, language and manner of life of the more primitive Eskimos of Alaska are being studied by two anthropologists.

Nunivak island, midway between the Aleutians and Nome, is the field which Henry B. Collins, Jr., and T. Dale Stewart of the Smithsonian Institution will explore to record the characteristics of a people who until four years ago had never seen a white man except for an occasional trader. To these people the most simple articles of modern civilization still are virtually unknown.

The two scientists will dig into deserted settlements for pottery, skulls, stone implements and other records of the past. They will work under the auspices of the American Association for Advancement of Science, American Council of Learned Societies and Smithsonian Institution.

On Nunivak, the natives live in single-room dugouts, burn oil-soaked moss for heat and light and eat fish, frozen or dried with seal oil and an occasional walrus or whale for variety.

Chamberlin Warmly Welcomed by His Home Town

Has Had Much Experience
in Work of a Similar
Character in Illinois.

Active legislative duties of the Anti-Saloon League in Washington will be assumed by Dr. Francis Scott McBride, general superintendent, succeeding the late Wayne B. Wheeler, according to announcement from league headquarters Tuesday. Even after Mr. Wheeler's successor is appointed Dr. McBride will continue to have general direction of such activities.

Dr. McBride virtually will assume all roles of Mr. Wheeler in obtaining enactment of favorable dry legislation and opposing measures considered detrimental to federal prohibition. Mr. Wheeler's successor is expected to confine his duties chiefly to legal matters, but at the same time possessing sufficient legislative experience to be of material aid to Dr. McBride.

Dr. McBride's success as a legislative leader in Illinois, from which state he came as state superintendent to become general superintendent, was highly praised and many of his successes their recounted in detail.

"Father of Wireless"

Paid Only $75 a Month

Paris.—Edouard Branly is cited by newspapers as typifying the struggle of French scientists to work under miserable conditions. Branly is inventor of the condenser. France calls him the "father of the wireless."

Branly had as his only assistant in a ramshackle "laboratory" an aged woman who eked out a living by doing extra hours of housework in other homes. This maid of all work is now the scientist's "laboratory chief." She was intelligent and the professor trained her in his work.

For 50 years Branly worked under these conditions, drawing a salary of $75 a month as professor and supporting his family by occasional practice as a physician. These facts are told by French papers as illustrating the need to pay well men who give their lives to science.

CIRCLEVILLE, OHIO

"The Bank That Makes You Feel At Home."

Coming Out of a Fog

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

BLUE sky, blue seas, blue eyes looking into his!

"I wouldn't call the king my cousin!" cried Forrester Knowlton, as he helped Peggy Sanford into his shining mahogany speed boat. "Where shall we go—North pole, South pole, or merely the blue Canary Isles?"

Pretty Peggy laughed. "Personally, I'd choose the blue Canary Isles, if it weren't for worrying Aunt Georgiana. As it is, how about Tamarack Cove?"

"You're captain!" said Forrester, and the next moment they were off. The two of them were members of a Murray Bay house party and had been irresistibly drawn to one another from the very start, as if Aunt Georgiana were contriving to keep them apart.

But now he had her to himself for a whole afternoon with the blue summer skies over them and the blue St. Lawrence stretching ahead.

Little was said until, suddenly and quite on the impulse of the moment, Forrester reached across to where Peggy sat in a cretonned wicker chair and possessed himself of her hand.

Slowly she withdrew it, a troubled look in her eyes. "Please!"

Forrester's heart sank. "I—I wasn't just playing, Peggy," he said hoarsely. "I—I am quite crazy about you. I want you for my wife."

Peggy lifted a pair of miserable eyes to his. "It's impossible!" she said.

"Impossible? Then you must care for some one else?"

"Oh, no!" cried Peggy quickly. "That is—I mean—well, I'm engaged to Lester."

Forrester stared, unable to believe what he had heard. True, he wasn't her own cousin and yet—why, everyone, including his own family, knew what sort of a boy Lester was. Weak, unable to resist temptation of any sort.

"Peggy—" he began desperately.

But Peggy interrupted him. "Look, Forrester, is that smoke?"

Forrester looked ahead where a formless gray cloud was blotting out their view.

"Fog," he said briefly, "rolling in from the ocean." With a turn of the wheel, he swung the Starling about so sharply she showed her blades above water. "We'll have to race it home," he said.

At that instant, the engine sputtered, caught, and died. With an exclamation, Forrester sprang to the tank. Then he groaned. "Hang Lester! I let him have the boat all day yesterday. I told him to be sure and fill up at the Landing. Instead, he turned in the reserve and we've been running on that."

He was too concerned over his discovery to notice that Peggy's eyes had widened suddenly at the mention of Lester's name. It was important that they get themselves out of the ticklish situation they were in. Already, cool wisps of the incoming fog were brushing their faces.

"Take the wheel and keep her headed toward that point," he directed his companion.

Reaching under the long cushioned seat, he extracted a half-length oar, used in fending when the usual bumpers proved inadequate.

"We'll just about make it," he said quietly, and set to work.

There were moments when advance cohorts of the fog came between them and the shore. Then for a space there would be sunlight again and Peggy would see that the trees running down to the water's edge were separating into individuals rather than appearing as a clustered dark green mass.

After what seemed an interminable length of time but was in reality little more than a couple of hours, the bow of the Starling nosed the sandy beach that stretched at the foot of a low bluff.

"We'll find the main road not far from the river," said Forrester confidently, "and follow it to the town."

He turned to lend the girl a helping hand up the bank, and, to his intense surprise, found it pressed between both of his.

"Wait, Forrester," she said shyly. "I—I think I am no longer engaged to Lester. I did it in the beginning to please Aunt Georgiana, who, for all she is only a sort of step-aunt, has been so wonderfully good to me. He told me yesterday he had to go to Three Rivers in the runabout—that there wouldn't be room for me. Instead—well, he took Genevieve Roberts out in your boat."

"I know I am right, for I saw Genevieve on the dock very early in the morning, and last night I overheard her tell Aunt Georgiana she had been steering the Starling all day. I thought she had been with you."

The man nodded gravely. "A lot is clear to me now," he said. "Lester asked me not to mention his change of plan to his mother, nor the fact that I did her errands in Three Rivers. Yes, I feel as if I were coming out of a fog. But Peggy, this means—"

One look into the lovely blue eyes uplifted to his and he knew what it meant.

OHIO STORIES

By J. H. GALBRAITH

Election Day and All-Saints Day

Our regular elections are held by law on the "first Tuesday after the first Monday in November" and the question why this insurance against the election day falling on the first day of that month must occur to anyone at all thoughtful.

It is an instance in which law takes cognizance of religious practices, though not the only one. The regulation dates back to an act of January 23, 1845. Without it election day would sometimes fall upon the first day of November, a contingency sought to be avoided, because in some churches—chiefly the Roman Catholic and Anglican—the first day of November is an important day in the calendar.

It is known as "All Saints Day" and is observed with proper religious exercises. It was established by Pope Gregory IV in 835 A. D. The list of saints of the church had grown until it was no longer possible to set aside a day exclusively to each. There were not enough days in the calendar. This day was set apart as one on which the memory of all the others should be honored.

"Church history states that the choice of this day was probably determined by the fact that Pope Gregory III had, in 731, consecrated a chapel in St. Peter's church in honor of all the saints and November 1 was the date of its consecration. Through the thousand intervening years and more, this act shows its influence on our election laws.

Tuesday has also been found a convenient day for election purposes. Monday, coming immediately after the general day of rest and worship, would obviously not be a wise choice. That day is used in making whatever final preparations for the voting may be necessary. When the dates for our primary elections were fixed, after the constitutional convention of 1912, it was prescribed that they should all be held on Tuesdays—the ordinary primaries on the second Tuesdays of August and those of the presidential elections on the last Tuesday of April.—Columbus Dispatch.

REGIONS OF ICE AGAIN
ARE CALLING TO CHINOOK

Eleven-Year-Old Husky Will Be Used as Lead Dog in Byrd's Expedition.

Wonalancet, N. H.—Regions where adventure lurks amid snow and ice and biting winds are beckoning once more to Arthur T. Walden and his dog, Chinook.

Walden, veteran dog-team driver, with experience in Alaska and other parts of the Far North, will accompany Commander Richard E. Byrd's expedition to the Antarctic. He will be in charge of the sledge dogs to be used in establishing bases for the commander's polar flights.

Chinook, eleven-year-old half-breed husky, and Walden, have been companions on many previous adventures and together have won honors in sled-dog races in Canada and the United States. Walden raised the dog from puppyhood and a strong attachment exists between them.

Chinook is still exceptionally powerful, although too old for racing and his training makes him one of the most valuable of lead dogs. Last March, in the face of freezing temperature and terrific winds, he led a team of six dogs over the icy slopes of Mount Washington, highest peak in the White mountains, to the summit.

It was the only time the mountain has ever been scaled by dog team, and the feat was achieved largely through Chinook's strength, courage and intelligence. He averted disaster repeatedly when wind threatened to sweep the team from the mountain-side into the yawning ravines below.

Walden, who is fifty-six years old, mushed behind dog teams before and during the days of the Alaskan gold rush. He is a close friend of Leonard Seppala, Alaskan musher famed for his dash to Nome with antitoxin during the diphtheria epidemic three years ago. He thinks Seppala the greatest dog driver in the world and Seppala may be one of four or five other drivers picked to assist Walden.

Rabbit Snares of the Cliff Dwellers Found

Denver, Colo.—The first rabbit snares ever found in Colorado or any western state where the cliff dwellers once lived, were recently found by a party of explorers in a prehistoric Indian cliff dwelling, near Grand Junction, Colo. One of the remarkable things is the splendid state of preservation of the snares. They and the arrows were buried under rock and dust nearly three feet deep which had fallen down during the ages since the cliff dwellers had left them in the large cavern.

They had never been moistened and the strings of the snares which were hand twisted soap weed cord, are so strong that even today they cannot be broken with the hands.

One end of the cord is tied to a short piece of wood, through which a hole has been made. The free end is then pulled through the hole, leaving a loop in which the Indian caught his rabbits. Twelve snares and twenty arrows were found.

Scientists are unable to figure out what the arrows were used for as they are in no way like the ordinary arrows, shot from a bow. They have no arrowhead of flint and no notch at the other end.

Mental Diseases in Young People Increase

New York.—An appreciable increase in the number of young people who fall prey to mental diseases is found by Dr. Means S. Gregory, head of the psychiatric department of Bellevue hospital.

People are more enlightened about the danger of letting mental and nervous ills gain headway, and as a result more youthful cases reach the hospital, he says, but this does not fully explain the increase.

"The higher standards of the present day are largely responsible," he states. "The demand for material luxuries is greater today than it has ever been. The longings of youth are more intricate, more difficult to attain. They are more likely to be thwarted. And an increase in thwarted longings and ambitions makes for an increase in abnormal mental and nervous states."

"Huskies" Become Pests
With Advent of Planes

Juneau.—With the rapid development of airplane service to and from Alaskan points, the problem arises concerning the future of the dogs which have been bred here for years as burden-bearers during the winter months.

Already, complaints are on file here, from numerous places, that dogs, loosed from their leashes, are reverting to the wild state and killing deer and moose. Many of these reports are from coast towns, where Indian owners of dogs have gone fishing for salmon and have left the dog families behind, generally without provision and shelter. Consequently, dogs, formerly very valuable, have gradually become the worst kind of pests.

Under a law here, it is forbidden to injure or kill prowling dogs—the statute having been formed when the canines were the prospector's and the trapper's best friends.

CONTEND THE HOBOES*"Curly" Tells Why "Road Boys" Shun Water.Portland, Ore.—While medical authorities maintain that one should bathe to be healthy, a different school of thought prevails in the ranks of "blanket stiffs."Bathing sometimes is a foolish and dangerous pastime, according to these gentlemen, and that opinion strange as it may seem, is backed by well considered facts."Little Curly" Davis, a tight-line skinner of construction camps, known throughout many western states as a teamster who never yet has degraded himself by feeding, watering or cur-rying a horse, was the leader in a recent discussion in refuting the alleged bunk that warm baths are beneficial to the physical man.Calls Reasons Sound.The supposition of hoboos preferring dirt gained new circulation recently with the publication of a story from London, pointing out that British tramps are shunning workhouses since the establishment of a rule compelling them to take warm baths."Those English tramps are right," said Curly, who, strangely enough, uses good English. "The objection is based on sound, scientific purposes.""That's so," agreed a soft-voiced "wobbly," who had just complained about the toughness of cops in the region "around the horn" in south-western Iowa. And the hard-faced student of Huxley nearby nodded his head in agreement. So did an Irishman who had been objecting to the use of copper wire because ore at the Anaconda mine in Butte is so heavy. Aluminum wire, such as is generally used in Canada, should transmit all juice, was his idea.But why the shunning of warm baths if hoboos prefer being clean?Companions Agree."Little Curly's" explanation is that in the winter time a man's body adjusts itself to the cold and protection is furnished by an indefinite sort of gloss, which hardens the outer skin.
This gives the man who is subject to extreme exposure unusual cold-resisting possibilities.If the film is broken by warm water after one has become accustomed to its protection exposure is likely to result in pneumonia, and sometimes death, the little tramp maintains, and his companions said this was so."That is the reason," continued Curly, "that so few of the 'road boys' in hard circumstances freeze to death.
We stand weather that would kill the average man; so does any teamster, floater, miner, or northern lumberjack."
"It also is the reason the English
'boes are shunning the workhouses under the new order."Tokyo Epicures Find*Kick in Bear's FeetTokyo.—It's not pickled pig's feet that tickle the appetite of rich Japanese epicures, but boiled bear's feet.It requires about a week to cook properly the nether extremities of a bear, and the cost of a dinner of this kind ranges from 200 to 500 yen, according to the fixings and liquid details.The latest dinner of boiled bear's feet given in Tokyo was described by the vernacular press as a real epicurean event. The host was Yoichi Sawamoto, one of the wealthy citizens of the capital. He gives a bear's feet dinner once a year.The origin of bear's feet as food is traced back to China several hundred or more years ago. A war lord captured an enemy general and was about to cut off his head. But, just before the sword was to fall, the war lord had a generous idea and informed the prisoner he would grant his last desire before the decapitation."Well, I would like a dinner of bear's feet before I die," replied the thoughtful victim.The hunt for a bear took about two weeks, but in the meantime the defeated general's reinforcements arrived, conquered and captured the war lord and released the general.Whereupon the head-cutting business was reversed. But, it is related, the general actually ate the bear's feet and found them so much to his liking that he became a bear-foot addict.Bobbed Hair Is Tabooed*by Women of HolsteinBerlin.—The north German state of Holstein holds a unique record in that there is not a bobbed head to be found among its native women.If the traveler succeeds in discerning a short-haired representative of the gentler sex, he will find that she hails from elsewhere than this former grand duchy.The Holstein women, who are famed for their beauty, pride themselves on their thick blond or brown tresses.
Even the girls of school age wear long braids and object to cutting off what they are taught is womanhood's crowning glory.Far from advertising their ability to clip women's hair, the barbers in towns like Kiel or Ploen display beautiful braids and curls in their shop-windows as an inducement to women whose hair is scant to pad their natural crop.The women are up to the minute in other fashions, such as short skirts and silk stockings, and they subscribe to fashion journals as avidly as do their sisters in the rest of Germany.NEWS ABOUT chief recipients of aid from the Red Cross in times of disaster, but in the recent floods on the Mississippi, animals were rescued and cared for in great numbers, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. At Opelousas, St. Landry parish, La., the largest temporary hen yard in the United States was constructed to feed 100,000 chickens driven from their roosts by the flood waters. The feathered refugees were fed by the Red Cross, as were 30,000 hogs, 10,000 mules and some 30,000 head of cattle. One of the problems arising from the work was to find the owners.FOR SALE.5 room frame dwelling and frame

constructor of serials, William Lord Wright was a newspaper man and at one time edited a country paper where the rival editor was most annoying.
This man had the habit of stopping his press to insert some bit of last-minute news. Hardly a day went by that didn't show on the front page an article starting: "We stop the press to announce."Finally it got on Bill's nerves, and one day his own front page bore the hated legend: "We stop the press to announce that there is nothing of sufficient importance to justify the stopping of the press. Giddap!"—Los An-

"Best For The Least"

HERE COMES THE CORN.

"Ninety in the shade, and no shade" inclines a man to grumble a little at the fervor of the climate. But, wiping the sweat from his brow, he scans the horizon and what does he see?

Two hundred million bushels of corn hurrying along the way to the crib. It may be 211,000,000 bushels, or a little more or less, but who cares for a few bushels of corn just at this time? All eyes are on Nebraska just now. Just because the state promises to turn in the only real corn crop in existence. Kansas, not a corn state in the real sense of the term, is booming along with a little old 150,000,000 bushel crop, which makes those jayhawkers feel mighty proud. But it is in the Nebraska crop that is getting the attention.

Crape hangers are singing the blues, telling a skeptical world that the old king is likely to be caught by rentless enemy, Jack Frost. Of course, if frost comes before the crop is ripe it's all off. But every one of these 90 degree days and 75 degree nights is doing double duty. Corn is maturing at a rate that is not to be underestimated. Every hour of hot sunshine is turning into gold the grains that were soft and white and tender two weeks ago. Doing the work speedily, but effectively.

We have no real reason to expect a killing frost in Nebraska until about the middle of October. A little nip, perhaps, but not the real blighting sort. September has seen frosts but very seldom to the extent of killing the corn crop. Rains have put the soil into splendid condition for fall planting and the farmers are making the most of the opportunity. And as each day dawns bright and clear and each night comes down hot and humid, the cry goes up all over the state:

"Here comes the corn." — Omaha Bee.

Largest Searchlight

What is declared to be the world's largest searchlight is being erected at the top of Mount Valerien, near Paris, to guide aviators. A single beam will direct night air travelers from the coast of France to the point where they arrive from England, until the aerial lighthouse at Dijon guides them on to Marseilles. The light is powerful enough to penetrate heavy curtains.

Wonders of Science

After a thousand years, scientists who are making exhaustive researches into a genealogy of vitamins have discovered that ham and eggs are twins.

Johnny, a Cat, and Cupid

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

JOHN RAYMOND listened to the most blood-curdling sharpening of a knife that he had ever heard. Was there to be a tremendous slaughtering in the flat next door or was it merely that some one was about to carve something?

Certainly whoever was sharpening that knife intended to get a keen edge on it and no mistake.

No wonder the gorgeous blue Persian cat, who occupied a sunny portion of the fence dividing the gardens one flight below, bounded frantically up the fire escape to see what it was all about.

John Raymond would like to have known, too, as his curiosity was aroused. Every morning, since the windows had been opened to welcome the new spring, he had listened to that knife-sharpening process and tried to picture what breakfast dainties could possibly necessitate so keen a knife. And each morning as the lovely cat heard it, he dashed like a streak of silver lightning into the open window.

Raymond had used every cat call in his vocabulary to lure the handsome pet into his own flat, but Johnny, as he had heard the cat called, simply stared at him with those wonderful topaz eyes and kept his distance.

And the more aloof Johnny kept himself, the more eager was Raymond to induce him inside. Raymond was not only a cat lover but he painted animals in so successful a manner as to have a considerable fame to his credit as an artist.

Then, like a flash the truth dawned on Raymond.

The sharpening of the knife was some secret code between cat and master or mistress, whichever the case might be. No doubt Johnny knew that a bit of meat was to be cut for him when that sound reached his ears, and he lost no time in demanding it.

Consequently, next day, when Raymond felt that the flat next door was empty of its human inhabitants, he got out his own carving knife and sharpened it bit of fresh liver and sharpened away with all his might.

A flash, and Johnny had whirled himself into Raymond's open window. There was no more aloofness. Johnny was purring and rubbing most affectionately against Raymond's legs and gazing up with his great topaz eyes. In fact, Johnny put his two silky paws on the edge of Raymond's breakfast table and left two smutty paw marks thereon.

That was the beginning of a new friendship. Johnny, being left for several hours a day all by himself, he made himself comfortable in Raymond's sunny flat.

And Raymond set to work on a painting that was later to dazzle the eyes of the animal lover's world. Raymond had wisely left a bit of Chinese blue velvet carelessly on the sunny window ledge, knowing full well that Johnny would easily ensconce himself thereon.

And the painting progressed wonderfully until one evening toward sunset when Raymond had closed the window with Johnny on the inside.

Suddenly into his artist's dream burst the sound of a frantic feminine voice.

"Kitty, kitty, KITTY! Come Johnny—COME JOHNNY!" and later the loud sharpening of a knife.

Raymond jumped to his feet and opened the window, but as a matter of fact Johnny never moved—he was well fed and most cozy on his Chinese blue velvet cushion.

"Are you calling a blue Persian cat?" asked Raymond with a guilty look on his face, "because if you are he's in here with me."

"Well, I like that! Enticing my beautiful cat into your flat and locking him in. I think I will report you to—"

"My dear young lady," expostulated Raymond while he definitely admired the speaker—or at least the little glimpse he had of her, "I merely wanted to make a portrait of your cat—he's the most beautiful animal I've ever seen."

"Oh!" exclaimed Miss Jarvis, hanging so far out of the window now that Raymond was fearful of her toppling out, "could I just have a peep at it?"

Raymond beamed and Miss Jarvis discovered what she had felt for a long time, unbeknown to Raymond, that she should like her masculine neighbor—she had often watched him going in and out of the flat but he seemed always so preoccupied that she had despaired of ever knowing him.

"Only upon the condition that you refrain from reporting me to the police as a cat-thief—I haven't any desire to figure in the papers."

Johnny in the meantime had arisen from his velvet cushion, stretched himself and yawned comfortably. His sitting for the day seemed to be over and he approached Miss Jarvis.

She took him fondly in her arms and he rubbed his soft head against her hands in perfectly happy cat love. He purred and was perhaps telling her all about the portrait.

"And when am I to see Johnny's picture?" asked Miss Jarvis.

"I'll bring it round to your flat door—if I may—right away, if you'll let me," said Raymond, and while the silvery Johnny and his golden mistress disappeared from the window, Cupid got out his bow and arrow.

AMUSEMENTS

One way to discover whether or not you have screen ability is to test yourself before the mirror.

According to Joan Crawford, whose rise to success has been one of the most phenomenal of the year, every feature of the face must express emotion. The stage star can use his voice to good effect. The screen actor has only expression.

Miss Crawford, who is now playing the leading feminine role in "The Taxi Dancer," by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at the Met theater Wednesday declares that in order to test your ability you should stand in front of a mirror, cover all the face but the eyes and express a given emotion with them alone. Then cover everything but the mouth, leaving the fingers apart to be able to see and try to get over the thought with this feature.

Try the same experiment with the eyebrows and then with the entire face. To make facial expression complete, each feature must work with the other for perfection. The legitimate actor can make skillful gestures which aid his performance, but in a large close-up the screen artist must say everything with his face.

"The Taxi Dancer," is one of the important pictures on M-G-M's 1927 releasing schedule and the cast includes Owen Moore, Marc MacDermott, Claire MacDowell, Douglas Gilmore, William Orlandson, Rockliffe Fellowes, Gertrude Astor and others. The screen play was written by A. P. Younger.

TERRY, KING OF ALL

UNCLE TOM PRODUCERS.

Uncle Tom shows may come and Uncle Tom shows may go, but—Terry's big company goes on forever, and is looked upon as King and Monarch of them all with the slogan, "Forever, Foremost and Newest." Many have tried to imitate the successful Terry for years, springing up like Jonah's gourd, but they have withered in the night like a school of minnows following in the wake of a whale, and it was thus that the lines were adopted, "After the Minnows Comes the Whale," and it has surely proved in its place when used. Terry has been a successful producer of Uncle Tom's Cabin for the past thirty-three years and this season is no exception to the rule. His production this season is more than living up to the past reputation of former years, the large company composed of some fifty people, both white and colored, travel in their own especially constructed cars, and give the performance under a monster waterproof tent, and when the show comes this year, it will be found to be greatly enlarged.

Terry's big production of Harriet Ward Beecher Stowe's famous slave play will appear for one night performance only at Circleville, Thursday, September 15.

Terry's Challenge concert bands will give free concerts upon the principal streets. Doors open at 7:30 p. m. Performance at 8 p. m. 13sept d3.

Deceptive Moon

The moon's halo is deceptive, and no wise man judges tomorrow's weather by it. Although the halo often appears before a storm, the storm does not wait for the halo and frequently comes unannounced. There are such things as "clearing" halos, when the halos precede good weather. As someone has observed, "You can only really know it's raining when it's wet."

Vice of Gambling

Be assured that, although men of eminent genius have been guilty of all other vices, none worthy of more than a secondary name has ever been a gambler. Either an excess of avarice or a deficiency of what in physics is called excitability, is the cause of it; neither of which can exist in the same bosom with genius, with patriotism, or with virtue.—Walter Savage Landor.

Botanists are seeking to learn the secret of why one camphor tree will produce solid camphor, and another, although similar in appearance only, camphor oil, which is far less valuable. The Chinese have kept the secret for centuries, and the Japanese, who discovered it in 1895, are also closely guarding it, for to lose it would be to surrender Japan's camphor monopoly.

The center of the money power of the United States got the name Wall Street because so many of the large financial establishments are situated on Wall street, New York. Queer Beliefs StillExisting in Norway

That superstition is still strong in some parts of Norway is plainly shown by a report from a governmental official who visited Lofoten in northern Norway. In a desolate place, where he took a rest, he found the body of a dog nailed to a birch tree and hanging with head downward. A closer investigation of this uncanny find revealed a piece of wood nailed to the tree under the dog and bearing the inscription: "I give you, oh my faithful dog, to death. Kneeling and in sorrow, I kill you and nail you to this tree with incantation that all wild beasts shall lose their teeth and leave my cows and reindeers in peace."

In all probability, one of the Lapps has here besought the spirits and followed the tradition of thousands of years ago when favorite animals were sacrificed to gain the favor of the Great Spirits of Nature.

Elizabeth, N. J., Sept. 12.—(UP.)—A deputy sheriff served Mrs. Linde E. Bache, 34, with summons and complaint in divorce proceedings brought by her wealthy husband, after her elopement with a traffic policeman.

Service of the papers was the first intimation that Mrs. Bache, wife of John Bache, millionaire iron and steel man, of Plainfield, N. J., and New York, had returned from Columbus, Ohio. She was arrested in that city with Joseph Devore, the policeman, who is in custody, awaiting trial for desertion of his wife and baby.

SLEEPING SICKNESS MARKS ITS VICTIMS

More than 5,000 people have died from encephalitis lethargica, the so-called sleeping sickness, in England and Wales in the last five years, according to an announcement recently made by the minister of health. Health authorities in England are expressing alarm over the encephalitis situation even though the number of cases has been reduced from 5,000 in 1924 to 2,267 in 1926. It has been estimated that about 30 per cent of all cases die, and that 70 per cent of the recoveries show various disease manifestations ranging from mild conduct disorder to complete paralysis. The London county council has made efforts to provide for the treatment of partly recovered victims, but this meets the needs of only a comparatively small group. It has been pointed out to the home secretary that there is need of providing an institution where children can receive special treatment, for its after effects are recognized as a contributing cause of delinquency. Active need of scientific research to combat this scourge is urged.

A Thought for Today

BARON CHALLENGED BY PARIS JEWELER

Rothschild, However, Laughed at Idea of Duel.

Paris.—A high society drama which led to Louis Cartier, the Rue de la Paix jeweler, challenging Baron Maurice de Rothschild, a racing man and member of the chamber of deputies, to fight a duel with him has caused a tremendous sensation in Paris.

In making up a list of guests for a dance that he was giving in his magnificent home in the Rue Monceau recently, Baron Maurice, who is a great-grandson of the founder of the famous financial dynasty, wrote down the name of Mme. Louis Cartier, who is one of the great Parisian beauties, but intentionally left out that of her husband. His social secretary made an error and sent the invitation to "Monsieur and Madame Louis Cartier," who were ignorant of the baron's real wishes.

"What are you doing here?" Baron Maurice asked M. Cartier as soon as he saw him.

"I am here because you invited me," M. Cartier replied sharply.

"You are mistaken," the baron insisted, while a number of guests stood listening to this conversation in amazement.

"Our invitation was addressed to 'Monsieur and Madame Cartier,'" M. Cartier declared hotly.

"Anyway, I don't want you here," the baron remarked and walked away.

Flushed with anger, M. Cartier called his wife, who was dancing at the time, and they walked out of the house, which threw a certain chill over the party. The first thing next morning, M. Cartier sent the invitation marked "Monsieur and Madame" to Baron de Rothschild and at the same time he sent his card and two seconds, who explained that their friend wished to avenge his honor with swords, pistols or any other weapon the baron preferred, and asked him to name his seconds.

Baron de Rothschild laughed at the idea of a duel and the affair still hangs in suspense with all the upper crust of Parisian society anxiously waiting to see what will happen. He has just left Paris to take a month's cure at Marienbad, however, and the jeweler can do nothing except gnash his teeth until his opponent returns.

"No Learn Step on Gas," Say Old Indian Braves

Glacier Park, Mont.—The automobile will not entirely replace ponies among the Indians until the present older generation of braves has entirely passed away, according to the observation of Chief Two Guns White Calf of the Glacier National park reservation. He says that while the younger Indians take speedily to flippers, their seniors never could learn automatic use of toe pressure on the gas feed, brake and clutch, since they had been too long in the reverse habit of "digging" their heels into the cayuse's ribs.

Boston Housewife Walks About Eight Miles Daily

Boston.—The average housewife walks eight miles a day in doing her day's work, according to the survey made here by the National Foundation for Foot Health. The foundation survey showed that the number of trips the woman housekeeper makes up and down stairs during a day would more than equal climbing to the top of the Boston custom-house tower—approximately thirty stories.

California Astronomer Measures the Universe

Berkeley, Calif.—The sidereal universe, that vast expanse beyond the earth which provides an ethereal setting for a billion stars, is estimated to have a diameter of 194 quadrillion miles by Allan Douglas Maxwell, a James M. Goewey fellow in astronomy.

This computation is the result of preliminary studies concluded at the University of California Lick observatory on Mount Hamilton.

Maxwell's conclusions were reached in a study of the destiny of stars toward the edge of the sidereal galaxy in which the solar system is found. His computation was offered as a working supposition, which may be altered by further observations.

Peering into the heavens, he made his observations by means of the spectroscopic in six areas in the Cygnus region of the Milky way. The problem confronting Maxwell was to compute the distances of the fainter stars and to discover how far into space the cloudlike mass extended.

Maxwell is believed to have reached a greater distance from the earth than has previously been reached in the section of the sky he studied, with single stars as an objective. He successfully photographed the spectra of stars approximately 96,000,000,000,000 miles away. At that distance few stars were observable, and Maxwell believes the sidereal universe probably ends not far beyond.

Breaks Closed-Car 2,000-mile Record

Then during night skidded in rain storm, turned over several times, received body repairs only

Then Finishes 15,000-miles at 62.709 M. P. H.

For more than 30 hours, averaging better than 65 miles an hour, this strictly stock Auburn Sedan had been whirling around the Atlantic City Speedway day and night.

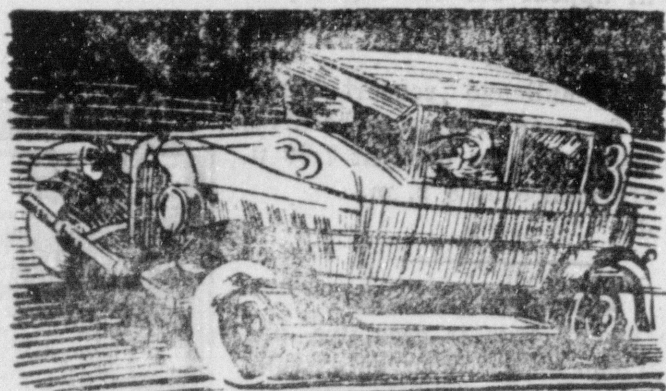

Then came a terrific rain storm. Wet track. At 70 miles per hour the driver dozed, the car crashed.

Radiator and body repairs were made. Seven hours had been lost. But the Sedan went back into the test with the same driver. It caught up with the other two Auburn stock cars and finished the unprecedented distance of 15,000 miles.

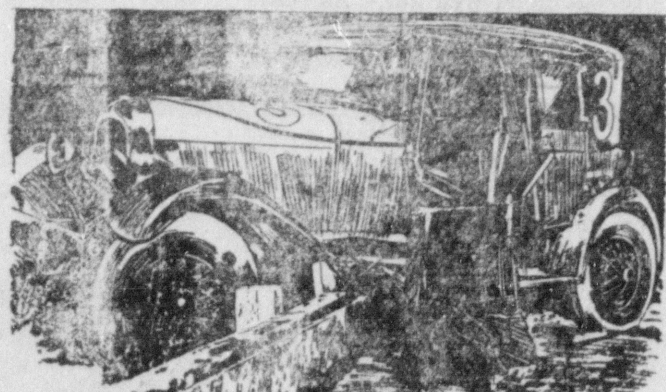

After the accident, the car was declared non-stock, as it was no longer complete—exactly as sold, but its time continued to be officially recorded by the A.A.A. The longest, hardest and fastest official test ever given a closed car.

Unheard of as this performance is, it was only an incident in the 42,000 miles of official stock car test Auburn conducted, breaking all records for completely equipped stock cars from 5 to 5,000 miles, and establishing new stock car records from 5,000 to 15,000 miles.

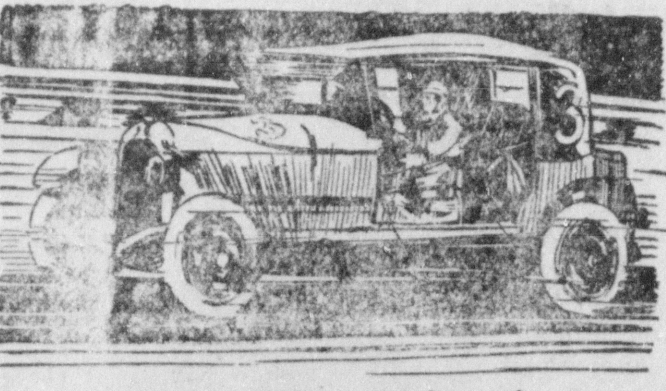

The purpose of this extreme and hitherto unattempted stock car test, was to demonstrate by three times greater proof the supreme leadership of Auburn cars in speed, endurance, durability and efficiency. Your Auburn dealer has exact duplicates of the Auburn cars that made these phenomenal records.

Drawing made from actual photograph
The Auburn Straight Eight Sedan, one of the three fully equipped stock cars in the Atlantic City Speedway endurance test. Here it is shown traveling better than 70 miles an hour after breaking closed-car 2,000 mile record at 62.583 miles per hour.

Drawing made from actual photograph
About the middle of the second night of this continuous run, when the track was wet as a result of a rain storm, the driver dozed. As a result, the car going at high speed skidded. It hit the guard rail and turned over. The sturdy construction of Auburn resisted this smash so well that only body damages resulted. The driver was unhurt.

Drawing made from actual photograph
Here is proof of stamina! After 7 hours for photographs and body repairs, this sedan went back into the endurance test, driven by the same driver, and finished the remainder of the 15,000 miles at an average speed of over 67 miles an hour for the net running time for the entire distance.

EPIDEMIC DYING

Last New Infantile Paralysis Case Here Aug. 30.

No new cases of infantile paralysis have been reported in Columbus since Aug. 30, City Health Commissioner Beer announced Monday. There are five cases here.

Indications are that the epidemic has virtually died out in Columbus.

Dr. Beer denied Monday that the death of Silvio Testaguzza, 5-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Augusto Testaguzza, 1165 Peters avenue, in University Isolation Hospital, Sunday, was due to the disease.

The child's death was caused from tetanus, Dr. Beer said. The illness had been diagnosed as infantile paralysis. Dr. Beer said. In addition to the parents, a brother, Vito, also survives. Funeral arrangements are being made by John Quint.—Columbus Citizen.

GRAVE SITES OF SOLDIERS WAR OF 1912

Complete Record is Sought
Which Will be a Part of
the Archives of Ohio.

Citizens of all parts of the state have been asked by the adjutant general's department to assist in the preparation of a complete record of the burial places of soldiers of 1812, which, when complete, will become a part of the state archives.

The movement which was originally sponsored by the Daughters of 1812 is in charge of Mrs. John R. Tanner of London, chairman of the grave marking committee of the organization. The society has furnished the state department with the names of 137 soldiers of the war and their burial places and members of the society believe that there are scores of other burial places which have not been recorded.

Among the names furnished to the department is that of Captain Jonathan Alder, pioneer Ohioan for whom dedicatory exercises will be held September 17, by members of the Jonathan Elder chapter.

It is planned to hold the exercises at the pioneer's cabin which has been preserved and was recently moved to Alder and Foster Chapel, near West Jefferson.

Love on a Ladder

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

IN CASES of serious illness Doctor Lanning did not attend members of his own family, but when Martha had hysterics that night in midsummer when Lanning accidentally encountered her in the act of eloping with Peter Letson, he did not consider her condition serious enough to require the services of an outside physician. Having hysterics, under the circumstances, was entirely normal. But even normal symptoms needed treatment, so after Peter had been dismissed with a curt good night from Doctor Lanning and a look of mute and tearful entreaty from Martha, Doctor Lanning escorted his sobbing daughter to her room, gave her a drink of cold water and told her to go to bed and to stay in her room for two or three days.

The interruption of Martha's elopement had been quite accidental as far as Doctor Lanning was concerned. He had been roused at midnight by the ringing of his bedside telephone. A country patient wanted him to come at once and rather drowsily, but with all speed, the doctor had put on his clothes and had gone downstairs and out to the garage to get his car when he heard whispers in the driveway ahead of him. Before he even realized that the young couple standing there were his daughter, Martha, and Peter Letson, he heard a shrill shriek of alarm. He knew the voice was Martha's, and Martha was standing there in hat and light coat with a little traveling bag.

The really surprising thing about it all, as Doctor Lanning thought after he got his daughter to promise that she would not make another attempt to elope during his absence, and had finally started off in his car, was that there was no sane reason why Martha and Peter should have planned an elopement.

Doctor Lanning didn't realize then that the elopement had come as the result of Martha's desire to have what she considered a romantic marriage. And now for the first time Doctor Lanning felt decided disapproval of Peter, and when the next morning Peter telephoned to ask permission to speak with him and Martha, the doctor curtly refused. He also warned the young man that any letters or messages he might send to his daughter would not be delivered. She was at present confined to her room in a state of nervous excitement.

From a distance Peter watched the Lanning house, and when he saw the doctor's car start out on his morning round of calls he cautiously drew near. Painters were at work on the house—looking at them Peter had a bright idea. And when Doctor Lanning returned an hour or so later he might have observed that whereas three men had been working on ladders and scaffolds when he left there were now four men in paint-spattered white overalls and regulation white canvas caps.

About ten o'clock the next morning Doctor Lanning backed his car out of the garage and down the driveway that ran close to the house and then to the road. Martha's room was on that side of the house just above the driveway—Doctor Lanning had gone to the garage from a back door of the house and had not noticed a painter's long ladder braced against the side of the house with base planted in the gravel driveway. Doctor Lanning reversed his car. He backed and then above the sound of his engine he heard a shout, a rattling of wood and a splash of something limp and liquid on the top of his car. This was the pail of paint that had been held by the painter on the ladder which the car hit as the doctor backed from the garage. The ladder lay flat on the ground—Doctor Lanning saw it as he quickly got out of his car to investigate.

He looked anxiously to see if he had extinguished some poor painter when he knocked the ladder down. He looked up and there he saw a tall young man in white overalls clinging desperately to the window sill—and then he saw two fair arms stretch out the open window and, after a few seconds when it seemed as if the young man might lose his hold on the window sill entirely, his tall, lank figure was drawn into the house.

Doctor Lanning hurried upstairs and into his daughter's room. He opened the door and saw Martha standing there with the painter's arms about her—and the painter was Peter Letson.

Doctor Lanning began to laugh, so, too, did Peter, and finally Martha.

"I had to see Martha—to see what she wanted me to do about the elopement," stammered Peter, "and since you wouldn't let me even write, I got the painter to give me a job. I bribed him for the privilege of working on this side of the house. I have spent most of my time for two days painting the frames of Martha's windows. The paint is so thick there I dare say it will have to be scraped or chopped off—"

"And then I came along and knocked the ladder out from under you," laughed the doctor. "It was very inconsiderate of you to let the paint drop on the top of my car—that will have to be scraped off, too." He paused and looked whimsically at Martha and Peter. "You're not going to try another elopement, are you? No objections to a regular wedding—any time you and Martha want it."

Britons Try to Walk to Coney in N. Y. Subway

New York.—An English family, consisting of R. C. Walton, his wife and daughter, started to walk to Coney Island using a subway for a footpath until James O'Donald, subway motor-man, made an emergency stop to point out to them "the error of their way."

In England, the word "underground" or "tube" means what Americans know as a subway, and subway means a foot passage under a street or building, so, when the Waltons decided to walk to the beach resort and were told that the subway would be the shortest way there, they entered the Broadway subway of the Brooklyn-Manhattan line and started down the express tracks.
